a hard-to-climb mountain the hardest way, beginning with all it's going to spend ing of some of the most ruthless characters in modern history, was a serious misjudging of his adversary. He overestimated all his triumphs without taking a peek, for he was threatening a man who had faced & overcome really serious threats all his life, & from men he knew meant them.

*after this conf. with a change in Kennedy, he held no mystery for Khrushchev. He was like the girl who stopped before his eyes. She by she sought to captivate, removing her policies, and padding, placing her false teeth in a cup & then screaming a terrible word on legs.
But knew not only what to do expect. He knew what was behind his policies & padding. He was not* about to go to war over the birds I think he pushed them about.

I had no intention left, all he could do was use the broken leg as a club.
And you don't get to the alter that way!
